through trials, pains and every discouragement. After guiding with indomitable spirit the sturdy Colonists against the trained and numerous forces of the Mother Country, he would have quietly retired, with the simplicity of a Cincinnatus to a farm, there to bestow himself upon busolic labors with perfect content.

But the peeple whom he had led to antonomy hade him lead them still. And through the beginnings of their new physique. National existence he did lead them, as forever as " First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen."

THE SMALL MAN WITH THE BIG SHADOW. THOMAS C. PLATT casts more gloom over everything on which he takes his stand than a creature of ten thousand times his bulk. He nearly upset the Fair for New York. But he had not the nerve to tell this great community to be hanged when it raised one long, loud howl of protest. He succumbed, glad to avail himself of the chance to extricate his head from the tightening noose through the gracious assistance of DEPEW, the

Now he poses as an earnest hustler for the great Fair. He goes to Washington, and on his return with a simulation of gladness, declares he has done a good bit of prosalyticing for the Fair. But-and oh! mark Mr. Platt's "but!"-we cannot have it until 1893, he says, We cannot get ready for it before then. So long as he hoped to make the great occasion an instrument of Republican political machinations, there was no talk of the impossibility. Doubtless, if he could count on it as a strong boom for partisen politics, Mr. PLATT would think the Pair could be had in the year of the Presidential election.

Thomas, take your shadow away! It is too movenfully large for your puny bulk. Go off and look at your grave, dug by yourself, in which the people are eager to inter you.

One cheerful thing about the present Chief Executive is that one always knows what to expect of the grandson of his grandfather. On public occasions the little man can be counted on to put in his pale, unobtrusive appearance, to relieve himself of a series of platitudes with an affecting varnish of cheap rhetoric, and then to retreat as quietly as a cat over a back roof.

In the same quiet, gentle way he will receive any little eleemosynary contribution from Congress. And this is about all that can be said of Mr. BENJAMIN Haumson, President of the United States. Somehow it seems too thin a tribute to the head of the greatest existing republic.

"For wightness years I was rombled with what seemed to be a last cold. It was sight at first and I did not think it worthy of attention. Other colds followed in rapid excession and my trouble grew gradually worse. My ness would stop up, first on one side, then the other. My nesse would been freely and frequently. My threat would get sore and I would got hearse. Lest winter my votes was so much affected that I could hardly speak above a whisper. My syes watered and my sight became affected. My memory are affected, for. I couldn't remember anything readily. I coughed very much, and would raise quantities of white and pellowish thingm or muchs, which dropped back into my threat. I would have pains in my cheek, sides and back—discip, should never the breath from my body.
